The condition of the river Min is again exciting upeasiness among the foreign residents at Focchow. A correspondent of the Foothow Herald draws attention to the rapidity with which the river between Foochow up. He says that it is now hardly possible less a cargo-boat. The only navigable point which China stands out against is the channel to Foochow some 170 years back They say that this distant part of their empire was, it is said, at the back of the Nantai, was only rescued from the rebels a few years and the initiated see sure indications that ago, and that the Government has not yet suffithe channel is returning to the same course. This, says the correspondent, "can be seen and proved by the way vessels at the Anchorage swing to the tide at half ebb, the has been expressed by some of them that in principal cause of which is that there are so case of boatilities taking place the present many obstructions above, and at the bridge, dynasty may be overthrown and a more prothat the force of the current has cut out its charg. old channel at the back of the island. Another cause for this is, it appears, to be found in the circumstance that junks throw their mud ballast overboard in the fairway, in quantities that would suffice, the writer thinks, to block up and impede the navigation of any river. The obstructions to the navigation of the Min are thus evidently due to artificial causes, traceable to the neglect and supineness of the authorities. The matter is one of great importance, especially by Mr. Wade in China. to foreigners in Foochow. The iterald's correspondent broadly asserts that if something is not done shortly, the whole of the valuable foreign property, buildings, wharves, de., will become useless, and therefore a complete loss. If the proper measures are not taken by those who have large interests at stake, and the authorities induced to take means to remedy the cvil, another business site had better, he thinks, he sought for. - But there will be no occasion for such a course if the Provincial Authorities will only do their duty by the port. Native interests must inevitably suffer, as well as foreign by the blooking up of the channel, and on their behalf it might be expected they would take steps to avert such a serious result. A passage boat plying between Shuntuck and this port while on her way to Canton few days since was overtaken by several piratical janks. The pirates fired a few shots before they drew alongside, and having thus discover before long, for they sat down, surintimidated their prey, bourded and plundered | veyed the task with rueful countenances, and her of every article of any value they could find. The owners of the passage bont petitioned he authorities for justice and redress, and some soldiers were sent up to the spot indicated, but the pirates hearing of their approach, lost no time in making their escape. It is rarely indeed that such crimes get punished, and still more seldon that the sufferors obtain any compensation for their loss. They are, in fact, fortunate if they come off without receiving personal innry. The impunity attending their robberies, course, renders the pirates more during, and t is no wonder that they flourish in the province.

THE VICARIGE OF HALIFAX.

The Marning Post says:—" The largest mum ber of aggrieved parishionets ever congregated in one placed are to the found at Halifax. Their grievance is not one that can be remedied by the Public Worship Act, for it does not arise out of ones. Ritualism. In Halifax there are no chasables altar lights, or other symbols of High Churchmanship: Halifex has no vicer. The patron is the Grown; the adviser of the Grown in the putronuge is Mr. Disraeli, The benefice worth in the gross about £2,600 a year. Mr Disreali has not up to this time been able to find a clergyman of adequate qualifications who is willing to take the post. For four months the living has been under the consideration of one and another, and all decline. The sheep are without a shepherd, and the parishioners are aggrieved. The truth is that there is a hitch about the income. A portion of the endowment, amounting, we believe, to about £700, was some years ago, when such things were easier done than now, commuted into a rate upon the inhabitants. For a long time this rate has been regarded as a grievance, especially by Dis senters, and since the abulition of church rates. some have professed to find it intolerable, and have contended that as it stands upon the same principle as church rates did, it ought to have fallen when they fell. The reasoning is no sound, but it has been very generally adopted Out of respect for the oligracter of Dr. Musgrave rare cases. But now that he is gone there is an rate to his successor. He would, therefore. bave to fight for it, or loss it. To do the former would place him in antagonism with the very people he would wish to conciliate: to do the latter would be to suffer an injustice, which no man likes to do, and would not be right towards his successor. It is easily conceivable that such a warfare about shillings and halforowns waged perpetually with some hundreds of thousands of parishioners would amount to put together. It is unfortunate that up to this time no expedient has been devised for getting rid of this difficulty, and consequently no good the endowment would be enough, without that £700. That is not the case; £2,600 looks a large sum in the gress, but when all outgoings are paid and curates are provided for, and provision made for dilapidations, the net emoluments would be little more than £1,500 a year which, though it would constitute, what is called a fat living in some parts of the country, is a very bare sufficiency for the calls upon the vicar of Halifax. The confiscation of the rate is not impossible to redeem it."

KHEDIVE all, thirty persons. On Saturday we reached Naples, where we saw the volcano from the steamer, but none of us landed. We left during the afternoon of the following day, and two days after, about an hour after sunrise, came in sight of Alexandria. On entering the port we hoisted the Arub flag, whereupon the men of was of the Khedive in the harbour hoisted theirs, and as we neared them—they were five in number-each fired a salute of twenty-one guns; a similar salute was also fired from the shore. When the steamer anchored, Muhammad Taufik and his brother Hasan, sons of the Kbedive, came on board, accompanied by Sherif Pasha and Basan Pashar the latter the Go vernor of Alexandrin, and other officials, who stated that they had been sent to welcome his Highness on the part of the Khedive, and to escort him on shore. On landing his Highness was again saluted from the shore, and also from one of the ships, the sailors manning yards and giving him a round of hearty cheers. * THE IDEAL AND THE REAL. You shall not know her—she who sat Unconscious in my heart all time I dreamed and wove this wayward rhyme.

And loved and did not blush thereat. The sunlight of a soulit land, A land of fruit, of flowers, and A fand of love and calm delight t A land where night is not like night, And noon is but a name for rest; Where conversations of the eyes Are all enough; where beauty fills The heart like hues of harvest-home; Where rage lies down, where passion dies, Where neace both her abiding place -----A face that lifted up's sweet face That was so like a life begue, That rose for me a rising sun Above the bended seven hills

Of dead and risen old new Roine. Not that I deemed she loved me. Nuy, I dured not even dream of that, I only say I knew her; say She ever sat before me, sat All still and voiceless as love is. And ever looked so mir, divine, Her hushed, vehement soul filled mine,

O you had loved her, sitting there Half hidden in her loosened hair: Why, you had loved her for her eyes, Their large and melancholy look Of tenderness, and well mistook Their love for light of paradiss.

And made itself a part of this,

Yes, loved her for her large dark eyes; Yea, loved her for her brow's soft brown : Her hand as light as heaven's bars; Yea, loved her for her mouth. Her mouth Was reses gathered from the south. The warm south side of paradise, And breathed upon and handed down By angels on a stair of stars.

Her mouth! 'twas Egypt's mouth of old, Poshed out and pouting full and hold With simple beauty where she sat Why, you had said on seeing her; "This greature comes from out the dim-· Far centuries, beyond the rim Of time's remotest reach or stir. And he who wrought Semiramis And shaped the sibyle, seeing this, Had bowed and made a shrine thereat, And all his life had worshiped her."

. I dared not dream she loved mc. Nav. Her love was proud; and pride is loath To look with favour, own it fend Of one the world loves not to-day-No matter if she loved or no. God knows I loved enough for both. And knew her sa you shall not know Till you have known sweet death, and you Have crossed the dark: gone over to The great majority beyond. -Joaquin Miller, in Appleton's Journal,
